INTRODUCTION ===== Although catheter ablation is recommended for the treatment of symptomatic supraventricular tachyarrhythmias, pericardial effusion requiring drainage is an undesirable complication. Supraventricular tachycardia (SVT) associated with pericardial effusion is usually treated with adenosine or radiofrequency catheter ablation.[@b1-asm-4-421] As adenosine is a cyclic nucleotide and mediates its action by binding to a receptor on the cell membrane, pericardial effusion is assumed to induce SVT by causing stimulation of the A1 receptor on the membrane of the atrial myocytes. Reducing the volume of the effusion is the best treatment.[@b1-asm-4-421] However, there are no reported cases in the literature of catheter ablation of SVT with pericardial effusion. Here we report a case of SVT with pericardial effusion treated with percutaneous catheter ablation in a patient with angina pectoris. CASE ===== A 38-year-old male with a history of uncontrolled atrial fibrillation was referred to our clinic to be treated. He had been diagnosed with sick sinus syndrome and atrial flutter and had been treated with a permanent pacemaker. On admission to our clinic, the patient complained of palpitations, severe chest pain, and dyspnea. Physical examination revealed an irregularly irregular pulse and the first and second heart sounds were muffled. Chest x-ray showed cardiomegaly. A 12-lead electrocardiogram showed atrial flutter with a heart rate of 400 beats/min (Figure 1{ref-type="fig"}). Transthoracic echocardiography demonstrated moderate pericardial effusion. Atrial flutter was controlled by an intravenous infusion of 25 mg adenosine, which terminated the tachycardia. Subsequently, we performed electrophysiological study using a Penta electrophysiological recording system (Biosense-Webster, Inc, Diamond Bar, CA, USA). A circular catheter (8 mm tip) was placed in the right atrium (RA) and the right ventricle (RV). The catheter positioned in the RV was used as a recording catheter. A 4 mm

Genetic alterations in the K-ras proto-oncogene in sporadic human lung tumors: association with stage and prognosis. The presence of K-ras mutation is related to poor prognosis and chemotherapy resistance in many human neoplasms, but its significance in lung cancer is unclear. K-ras mutation may cause a change in growth characteristics and chemo-resistance. Mutational analysis of K-ras exons 1 to 4 was performed by polymerase chain reaction-based methods in 55 sporadic human lung tumors. Ki-ras mutation was detected in 31 (56.4%) of 55 cases. The Ki-ras mutation was not detected in 10 (18.2%) of 55. Two Ki-ras mutations were present in 2 (3.6%) of the 55 cases. Thirty-eight (69.1%) of the 55 cases were at stage I and II, and 17 (30.9%) of 55 were at stage III and IV. Twenty-nine (78.4%) of the 38 stage I and II cases were Ki-ras negative, and 9 (47.4%) of the 18 stage III and IV cases were Ki-ras positive. The Ki-ras-negative cases were all squamous cell carcinomas (SCCs), but the Ki-ras-positive cases were of other histologic types. The Ki-ras-negative cases appeared to have a good prognosis, while the Ki-ras-positive cases had a poor prognosis. The findings indicated a negative relation between Ki-ras and SCC. Furthermore, Ki-ras mutant cases in stage III and IV showed a better prognosis. Therefore, the presence of Ki-ras mutation correlated with stage and prognosis.Q: How to fetch image from DB using Sqlite and sending back its download url I have an app that can upload and show image from gallery. And it works fine. For changing images I have my own image. But when I delete the app from the device and then install it, I want to see the image in the previous image. So I fetch the db image and show it as the image. How can I do this? I have found on SO that the Sqlite class doesn't support blob. But I think it has to be a general way to fetch the image from the database and showing it in app. This is the class I use to show the image. public class ImageView1 extends Activity {
